

Moringa School to host women's coding course

By Gabriella Mulligan

18 Oct 2017

Kenyan coding academy Moringa School is to host a female only edition of its “Moringa Prep” introduction to coding course, with the aim of graduating more women developers.

©jes2ufoto via www.123RF.com

Moringa School said the decision to host a 'Women's Bootcamp' is informed by the belief that women in tech can contribute to moving the industry forward, as such the school hopes to support more women in becoming developers.

The five-week full-time course will begin in November, and teach participants the fundamentals of programming.

All the Accenture Innovation Awards winners!

17 Oct 2017

Graduates of the Women's Boot Camp will be eligible to progress to Moringa School's full-time immersive Moringa Core programme in January, where they will specialise in Android or full-stack development paired with soft skills matched to employer needs.

The course fee for Moringa Prep ranges between $400 and $800 (depending on location and nationality), and Moringa School is offering a 50% discount for the women's edition.

Apply here.

This article was originally published on www.disrupt-africa.com.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>