Due to differences in biology and lifestyle, men and women face different cancer risks. You may assume you don't need to visit a doctor for minor health issues, but cancer symptoms are often vague. For example, prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men but has some of the least apparent symptoms.

According to the National Cancer Registry (NCR) report, men's top five invasive cancers are prostate, colorectal, lung, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and melanoma. Aside from prostate cancer, cancers affecting only men include testicular and penile cancer.

Knowing about these cancers, recognising the warning signs and making healthy lifestyle choices are crucial for successful treatment and lowering cancer risk. Below is a list of early warning signs of male cancers to look out for. Having one or more of these symptoms does not mean you have cancer, but if they are consistent, it is a good idea to consult a medical professional for proper evaluation.

Early warning signs of male cancers

1. Abnormal lump – If you feel a mass or lump right below your skin, it may be a sign of cancer. Lumps typically appear in the breast, testicles, lymph nodes and soft tissues, like tendons and ligaments.
2. Changes in your testicles – If you notice changes in your testicles, such as swelling, increased weight or changes in size, it may be a sign of testicular cancer. This type of cancer is more common among young and middle-aged men diagnosed with testicular cancer.
3. Changes in your restroom habits – If you experience signs like blood in your urine, blood in your stool, or changes in your bowel habits, it may be a sign of bladder or prostate cancer.
4. Changes in your skin – If you work long hours outside in the sun or have a history of sunburns that turn into blisters, always monitor your skin closely. What you may think are sunburns from working in the sun may be skin cancer. Look for unusual bleeding, scaling or sores on your skin that do not heal. Other signs include changes in warts, moles and freckles.

5. Persistent cough – A cough lasting more than three weeks indicates something's wrong and could be a sign of lung cancer. Persistent wheezing, shortness of breath or coughing up blood are symptoms that require medical attention.
6. Changes in your mouth – You need to pay close attention to changes inside your mouth. If left untreated, white patches inside your mouth or tongue may develop into oral cancer. Additionally, if you experience sores, unexplained bleeding, numbness or tenderness in the area around your mouth, it's wise to seek medical advice.
7. Consistent pain – Back pain, a headache that won't go away, and stomach pains are all symptoms your doctor needs to know about. Regardless of location, persistent pain can be the first sign that something's wrong.

Self-care and lifestyle choices

As cancer prevention information continues to develop, it's well-accepted that lifestyle choices affect the chances of getting cancer. For men, adopting behaviours that promote a healthy lifestyle enhances physical fitness and contributes to a great immune system. Avoiding tobacco use, eating a healthy diet, maintaining a healthy weight, staying physically active, and protecting yourself from sun exposure all help reduce cancer risk. Embracing self-care and healthy lifestyle choices empowers men to take charge of their health, mitigate cancer risks and pave the way for a longer and more vibrant life.
