Following on from his stint as a juror for Cannes Lions 2018, creative director and designer of VM DSGN Vumile Mavumengwana is the only SA juror selected for this year's White Square Ad Festival. Here, he explains what he's most looking forward to from the judging experience and the impact of the global creative community recognising Africa and South Africa in particular.

Branding Jury

Mavumengwana will serve on the 2019 White Square branding jury.

The White Square International Advertising & Marketing Festival is one of the largest creative festivals in communications industry of Eastern Europe, with the 11th rendition set to feature Mavumengwana on this year's branding jury.

This is exciting for him as it's a follow up on last year's Cannes Lions judging.

Vumile Mavumengwana on the power of creative work that resonates universally

He's extremely proud to be representing the continent through his addition to the jury panel and says:

“ It's great to be included and be part of the international community, especially on platforms of creativity and design – both being my passion points. ”

We caught up for a quick Q&A about judging international award shows, and the impact of judging international award shows on the work he does...

❏ How did you find out you'd been included on the jury?

I received a LinkedIn message from Anastasiya Kuchur, the festival's information and communications director inviting me to be part of this year's branding jury. She invited me based on my participation in the 2018 Cannes Lions design jury.

❏ Amazing! Are you White Square's only African juror this year?

Yes, the jury lists show I'm the only South African judge.

Most of the judges are from Europe, Russia and Asia, with a handful from the Middle East and South America.

What does that mean to you?

This signals to me that the international creative community recognises Africa, and South Africa in particular, in terms of our unique brand of creativity and innovation.

It shows interest in our point of view and welcomes us to be part of the voices that celebrate ideas that are truly universal, as well as ideas that connect across cultures in a fresh and new way.

What are you most looking forward to, from the judging experience?

Meeting the other judges, seeing the work, the ideas, the craft in particular, and learning from emerging global trends.

“ International work is always interesting as it comes from a first-world perspective, but there is also work that is universal and deals with subjects we all face as a society – challenges that our local brands also face as our world evolves. ”

It definitely elevates it. makes it more global and validates the fact that we need to continue developing our own breed of

It's definitely created a market for more global, and validated the fact that we need to continue developing our own brand of creative that is distinct work that represents us – our people, our culture and aesthetic. Definitely. Based on that point, how does judging international award shows affect the work you do yourself?

This is evident in the work that is already making its way onto the global stage through the likes of Nelson Makamo, Trevor Stuurman, Black Coffee, Karabo Poppy Moletsane, Porky Hefer and Laduma Ngxokolo, just to name a few.
