The events, which will take place at the company's brick and mortar stores, will feature sessions with various local celebrities, artists, photographers and musicians sharing their skills in "photography, video, music, coding, art, health and more".

Each session will involve Apple's products and how the company's various offerings have helped improve the lives of digital creatives, so it's largely a marketing exercise too.

“Kids, teachers, parents, those new to Apple or even pros can attend sessions relevant to their skill set, experience or interest,” iStore said in a press release.

The Meets include social content training with Redbull content creator Jono Ferreira and music production lessons with recording artist Prince Kaybee.

59 new emoji are coming to iOS, MacOS and Apple Watch
